An Interview with Executive Director Meredith Hendricks

A recent conversation on the deck about conservation in Santa Barbara County

QUESTION: What is “This Moment” in conservation and why is it so important?

MEREDITH: It is hard to imagine many moments in human history in which how we treated this planet and each other had more consequence. So far this year we have had an epic heat wave with a bit of hurricane, and then for a moment, it seemed that would be followed by the last of a typhoon. We need to act with urgency to protect the open spaces and agricultural lands that give us the ability to adapt to and heal a changing planet. I’m not interested in moving to Mars. I am interested in staying here. In this county we can get it right for conservation and for each other. And that can make a real difference.

QUESTION: Stepping back and looking with the benefit of time is when one can see how the puzzle comes together. Now that you have had a couple years at the Land Trust, can you give us some perspective on how the pieces are coming together?

MEREDITH: I cannot think of another place in California that not only faces the pressures of growth and a changing climate, but that has this level of ability to respond to those challenges in a visionary way because we still have room to do so. Santa Barbara County has this incredible mix of stunning places, essential food systems, and people who want to help. There are also unprecedented public investments in climate resilience, conservation, and wildfire and disaster preparedness that we can leverage to remain a source of clean air, clean water, healthy grasslands, and coastal ecosystems.

We need to do a better job of including more voices and more ways of knowing the land in our scope of work so that we can come up with the best possible network of conservation that serves communities equally.

The Land Trust is so proud of the more than 30,000 acres we’ve protected so far. With seven million acres of land in Santa Barbara County, imagine what we can do together while still providing room for economic development, housing, transit, and everything else that is important to our community.

The Land Trust is an expert in conservation in the County and we are well positioned to become an even more influential leader.

QUESTION: How does the Land Trust work with other conservation organizations such as the Nature Conservancy and the Trust for Public Land? And what is the unique role LTSBC plays?

MEREDITH: We work here and only here; we know Santa Barbara County down to the level of individual properties, unique habitats, and microclimates. We have long-term, trusted relationships throughout the region, and we are building more by the day. We partner with national and international park and conservation groups, such as the Trust for Public Land and the Nature Conservancy, by acting as the local expert and playing a long-term role in the projects they bring to the table.

For example, we hold the easement for UCSB’s North Campus Open Space. That is a forever obligation, no matter what. With the Trust for Public Land, we often collaborate on how to fund conservation in our area and how to navigate multi-party deals. The Trust for Public Land works to expand access so we work with them on projects that relate to recreation and equitable distribution of open space. The Nature Conservancy tends to focus on large-scale habitat conservation and research, which is why they own the Dangermond Preserve. We help to leverage their expertise that is based on working in many places with our expertise, which is based on working here at home.
At the Land Trust for Santa Barbara County, we understand that giving is personal and intentional. We are deeply honored by your generosity, loyalty, vision, and trust. Your gift is an investment in our shared home, this County, and all the extraordinary treasures it holds.

Protecting land is not an easy task. It can be complicated, fraught with delays, and subject to the whims of our economy, but there is nothing more rewarding or meaningful. The land the Land Trust protects is protected forever.

Thank you for your generous support of our mission and day-to-day work. This is an exciting time for conservation, and we are optimistic about what can be accomplished with you as our partners.

Thank you.

STRATEGIC PLAN GOALS IN ACTION NOW

- ACHIEVE 35,000 to 45,000 total acres conserved countywide—approximately 2,500 per year

- CONSERVE a key property on the Gaviota Coast

- EXPLORE the creation of a signature preserve—like Arroyo Hondo—for the people of the Santa Maria Valley

- EXPAND public outreach and get more of our community passionate about, aware of, and invested in our work

- CONTINUE to make nature accessible to a more diverse group of our extended community

In addition to natural beauty, recreation, unique topography, ranching, and farming values, Santa Barbara County is home to 7 million acres of land, 70 endangered species, 4 distinct ecoregions, and it is located within the California Floristic Province—recognized as one of only 36 biodiversity hotspots on the planet. The Land Trust focuses on Santa Barbara County and only Santa Barbara County and is therefore a local conservation expert.
A Planned Gift to the Land Trust for Santa Barbara County Will Leave a Legacy You Can Feel Good About

Top among the donors who deserve our deepest thanks and gratitude are our Land Trust Legacy Society Members. These are donors who have let us know that the Land Trust for Santa Barbara County is in their estate plans.

Planned gifts are perhaps the most important way to ensure that land will continue to be protected in Santa Barbara County now and in perpetuity. Planned gifts come in all shapes and sizes and can be given in various ways. A donor who may not be able to make a large annual gift, may be able to make a bequest that will make a transformative difference for the Land Trust and to the community at large. Planned gifts are a way for donors who believe in the Land Trust’s mission to protect land in Santa Barbara County and leave a lasting legacy. Planned gifts can also go a long way to shelter and preserve family wealth for the next generation.

If you are considering including the Land Trust in your will, or perhaps already have, please let us know by contacting Carrie Mullen, Development and Communications Director, at cmullen@sblandtrust.org.

“A man has made at least a start on discovering the meaning of human life when he plants shade trees under which he knows full well he will never sit.”

– D. Elton Trueblood, Former chaplain at Harvard and Stanford Universities

10 Ways to Become Engaged with the Land Trust’s Work:

1. GO OUTSIDE by visiting one of our public preserves for a hike or a stroll with a friend.

2. RENEW YOUR SUPPORT for the Land Trust and put your tax-deductible gifts straight to work to protect land in Santa Barbara County.

3. DESIGNATE the Land Trust as the beneficiary of donations through Amazon Smile or other micro-donation projects.

4. LEARN about the unique nature of our County through our Lunch and Learn program or our docent or field expert hikes or walks.

5. ATTEND OUR SOCIAL EVENTS to get to know the Land Trust better and to enjoy the camaraderie of others who care about this place in the same way you do.

6. STOP BY the farmers and ranchers we support at your local farmers’ markets to sample and buy their goods.

7. SHARE OUR STORY the Land Trust needs our friends to spread the word about what we do. Help us make new friends and continue our work by introducing us to new people.

8. REMEMBER the Land Trust in your year-end giving.

9. HIT PAUSE and take a minute to observe and listen to nature around you. It might be the birds chirping outside your window or a Red-tailed Hawk soaring in the distance. Maybe it’s the bees buzzing in the foliage as you walk to work. Better yet, take a drive along the Gaviota Coast and appreciate some of California’s last unspoiled coastline. The best marketing the Land Trust could hope for happens when people like yourself take notice of all the natural bounty we are so fortunate to still have in this county and realize why it is worth protecting.

10. GIVE NATURE TO THE NEXT GENERATION by giving young people—maybe your own children, grandchildren, nieces, and nephews—the great outdoors. Give our young people the opportunity to explore, to discover, and to delight in the natural world around them. They will benefit from their time in nature and hopefully become nature’s next stewards.

The preliminary financials reported in our impact report today are derived from the Land Trust for Santa Barbara County’s financial statement ending June 30, 2022.

A land trust’s financial statements are unlike many other organizations in that land acquisitions and the ongoing costs associated with them can take many years. This makes it difficult to measure a land trust’s efficiency by looking at a single year on its own.

This account of our financial health reflects our finances for the fiscal year of July 1, 2021 to June 30, 2022 and shows investments in new conservation, staff, and significant government and public grant administration costs to earn future funding.

Our final audited financials will be available on our website in December 2022. Please visit www.sblandtrust.org for our audited FY22 financial statement and 990.

Your ongoing support translates to significant conservation wins throughout the County. Thank you for your support and for moving our shared mission forward.

*Our Stewardship Endowment is income toward the cost associated with specific properties.

Other is income received from fire insurance following the Alisal Fire of October 2021, dividends and interest, and fees from reimbursable projects.
